Course content

The precise content of the course will be influenced by the participants’ interests and preferences, but in essence the course will cover topics as:

- the concept of CSR
- shareholder theory vs stakeholder theory in the debate around CSR
- CSR and legitimacy theory
- classifications of CSR
- research methods used in CSR research
- International, national and corporate initiatives in the area of CSR: Recognition, measurement and disclosure

Course design

The course consists of five days of seminar sessions on different themes. The readings for the seminars will primarily be journal articles and participants will be encouraged to supplement these with their own selected texts. The course closes with the examination of individual written assignments (seminar session 6). The exact schedule will be decided on in participation with course participants. Guest lecturers will be invited to the seminars to present relevant CSR research. During the course, participants will be asked to present their own PhD projects. They will have an opportunity to receive feedback on their project from faculty and other course participants.

Assessment

Assessment is based on active participation in the seminar sessions and an end-of-course written individual assignment of reflecting character. To pass the PhD course, the participant must actively take part in the scheduled activities (80 % attendance) and have all assignments approved.

Credits

Grades are Pass or Fail.
